May 10, 1887.

My Dear May,

I am happy in the thought that my review will be read ^{to-night} in part at least, by you. There is not in the world another tongue or voice that I should wish to take the place of yours for that service. I am truly grateful that you are well enough to give my words the ~~aid~~ force they will derive from your utterance of them.

I learn from F. J. G. that the Herald, which declined at first, has concluded to print my review, and agrees to give me 100 copies for circulation. This is a small number, but we can still have it in pamphlet form if thought best.

The Daily Herald is such a blankety affair that I don't like the idea of sending it through the mail with no marks to designate the article in the confused heap of things by which it must be surrounded. If the review is so fortunate as to get all upon the same page, I propose to cut it out as I did the review of Dr. Post, and put it in an envelope. It will be more trouble, but it will pay.

I shall want you to send me a list of names to whom it should be sent. F. J. G. will do the same, and I shall make a list myself. Then the three lists can be ~~prepared~~ compared, so that we shall not send duplicates to any one.

We shall be glad to have a call from Mrs. May. If Mrs. Johnson knew where to look for her, she would gladly call first.

Yours, faithfully,

Oliver Johnson.
